221 222 223 224 225 26 27	I, Chad Falkenberg, declare as follows: 1. I am the President of Soilworks, LLC. personal knowledge of the facts set forth in this Declaration and can testify competently to those facts.

- 2. Oil-Sheen Free is not generally understood to be under any specific standard or test method in the dust control and soil stabilization industry.
- 3. Midwest became aware of Durasoil on a Military helipad test in Yuma, AZ in and around September and/or October of 2005 when Soilworks successfully tested its products against Midwest's Envirokleen product.
- 4. Polar Supply Company, a vendor of Solworks' products, bids all its own projects including those with the Alaska Department of Transportation. Soilworks does not bid any projects in Alaska and is not involved in the decision-making process related to which projects Polar Supply chooses to bid.
- 5. Durasoil has no "rainbow effect" when poured into/onto water. Soilworks use of the term "oil-sheen-free" is based upon a visual examination of the products interaction with water and my common knowledge of white-oils.
- 6. The soil-stabilization and dust control industry is made up of sophisticated manufacturers and vendors of soil and dust stabilization products, contractors and subcontractors and sophisticated federal, state and local governmental and corporate entities which submit requests for bids which require soil stabilization products.
- 7. It is common industry practice that a contractor or vendor will submit a bid for projects even if it is apparent from the bid request that the contractor's or vendor's products or service do not meet the expressed specifications or requirements of the bid request. It is common practice to bid as an alternate or a substitute to help generate awareness of a product or service in the mind of the buyer. Such bid responses sometimes lead to a change in a buyer's bid requests specifications especially if a bid is considerably cheaper than what was
